Acknowledgements

The path to write a book takes many turns; this being no exception. Along the way I encountered many extraordinary individuals who graciously and generously took their time to help make this endeavor become reality. I want to begin by thanking my production team. To my research manager Sukhzinder Braich, who, even late at night after a full day of work and school, still found time to research and gather all the neurotic details I felt necessary for each and every EMBA program: thanks. Thanks to Richard Price for his strong command of the English language and business editorial expertise that gave each draft of the manuscript its shape and intelligence. I want to thank Jodi Reamer, Esq., of Writers House for offering me her legal and business guidance and final approval on every written word. Thanks to the web design team of Previsual for helping me build the website www.embaworld.com to serve as an additional resource for prospective students, employees, and employers seeking timely and unbiased information about the EMBA. Thank you, Katherine Richman, for courageously cheering me on during your hectic medical school studies. To Judith Price, principal of Berke and Price Associates, a thriving career counseling and career coaching practice in Massachusetts: thanks in helping me to understand the career challenges we all face.

I also want to recognize all the distinguished contributors who took time out of their busy schedule, often more than once, to talk to me about their experiences. Their words of wisdom, insight and other contributions can be found throughout the many pages of this book. I am proud to know such a fine group of business professionals. They are vice presidents, directors and CEOs, lawyers, doctors, and engineers, and mothers and fathers who have accepted the challenge of working full-time, studying full-time, and for many, juggling a family, all at the same time. These people come from Fortune 100 to 1000 companies to family-run businesses, and not for profits. They offered their own experiences and came from distinguished programs at Baylor University, Claremont Graduate University, Columbia University, Cornell University, Duke University, Fairleigh Dickinson University, Fordham University, Georgetown University, George Washington University, Kellogg Graduate School of Management, University of Baltimore, New York University, Temple University, University of Illinois and Wharton School of Business. Also noted are executives and hiring managers of JP Morgan Chase, Solomon Smith Barney, Merck-Medco. All of these fine people have names: RP Singh, Mary J. Kucharz, Esq., Shelly Boyce, D. Cooper, Kathryn Beatty, M.D., Synthia Laura Molina, Matt Brooks, Howard Birenbaum, M.D., Francis Petit, Audra Montefusco, Merle E. Giles, Phil Sanchez, James Cecere, Kevin McNally, Brett Tarleton, and Darcy Sementi. Thanks to the research staff at the Executive MBA Council in Orange California and the Graduate Management Admission Council in Virginia. Finally, thanks to my entire Executive MBA Class of 2000 at Fordham University in New York City.
